5. PUBLIC COMMENT

- Dave Kaplan, Port of Seattle, shared that in addition to what City Attorney Newsom reported regarding the StART Committee Meeting, Alaska Airlines shared an announcement of the elimination of their Q400 aircraft, which may address the concern expressed relative to the planes turning over Burien and not just the noise of the aircraft themselves. When the elimination of the aircraft occurs, it should help reduce/eliminate planes turning over Burien.

Mr. Lance Lyttle
Aviation Managing Director
Seattle-Tacoma International Airport

Dear Director Lyttle:

During a 2022 StART meeting, Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) representative Justin Biassou reminded Port of Seattle (Port) representative Ms. Arlyn Purcell that the Port must make a written request to the FAA if the Port or a municipality wants more than 45 days to review the Sustainable Airport Master Plan (SAMP).

Due to the anticipated length and technical nature of the SAMP, the City of Burien respectfully asks that the Port of Seattle submit a written request to the FAA to grant a substantially longer review period of the SAMP. Since, in addition to being lengthy and detailed, the SAMP will govern not only the Port's short-term goals but the Port's long-term vision, it would be difficult for Burien (or any municipality) to carefully review and share thoughtful feedback on the SAMP in less than 60 days. In fact, having only 45-60 days to review the SAMP would make it difficult to review the SAMP and then seek council guidance on any response or recommendations. Permitting 90 to 120 days for municipal review would be more helpful.

This request is consistent with the Port's SAMP priorities stated on its SAMP webpage. The Port's SAMP webpage states that the Port wants to "minimize impacts to our neighbors" and have community engagement as the SAMP develops. The best way to achieve both goals is to allow your neighbors and the surrounding communities enough time to evaluate operations and impacts and respond to the SAMP.

Finally, please request a substantially longer review period soon to avoid a response from the FAA that the request was late.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Mayor Sofia Aragon
City of Burien
